on Judges of the Court of Appeals, it hest court, and provides that "any five embers of the Court shall form a quorum ion of a majority of the highest Court of a intry, that it is final. That follows us a all men. But to say that manifest errors and mistakes, in what has the form of a final judg.

brought to its notice, is unreasonable, and might work great injustice. And whether the application is seasonable or not most also rest in the discretion of the highest tribunal. It has been uniformly and we think wisely so held in the State of New York, and we shall so hold.

Upon re-examining the question on its matits we are constrained to believe that no much stress was laid upon the supposed alomission by the deed taken in 1866 of the title of the planning.

There was evidence, which the Court below of the plaining.

There was evidence, which the Court below held sufficient, of adverse possession for nearity ten years up to the taking of that deed.

The plaintiff claims as the heir of Nihou whe was daughter of Alapai, the original patentee But she died in 1860, and when the deed of 1866 was taken, her heir the plaintiff had been the real owner for any years.

The deed of 1866 ignores and denies Niboa's right, and the granters in the deed claim to be the heirs of Alapai. Instead of admitting, the deed directly decree the plantiff a title ob-tained through Nibas.

Acts denying the title of Nibas by the grantee in the deed of 1866 had been done, inafficient, it may be, to show dissersin, but smalltuning a claim of title as against bor. The deed was taken to be an acknowledgement the title of Nihoa, but it is fact might be iken as a denial of it.

We are also so further thought and research, schimed to believe that even had the dood's reitals been as the Court supposed, the effect eable here without reading the special stat-ory law which applies to them. As has en said, the nature of the land in question is ts of possession to ripen into title. We a named that, as found by the Chief Susti-ere was sufficient proof of title in the defa-

int by adverse possession. Because of the mistake to which we have erred, we have concluded to reverse our rision, and to affirm the judgment of the

The former opinion of the Court was base to the fact that the dood taken in 1800 was at chimaledgement of title in other partice fart as it was not an acknowledgement of the life of plaintiff's ancestor, and may be consid-ously acknowledgement of the and exceptibility also or verbal bequest of Alapai, I sign th

Bishop Jeremy Taylor published a work on ay about the middle of the seventrenth control. He says: "But that cards are themselves lawful I see no reason to doubt." And orther on he says. "He that means to make refreshments. Let games be for nothing r almost nothing, and cards are innecent, and be game as innocent as push pin." Dr. Johnson regretted that he had not learned play at cards, giving as a reason. "It is ory useful in life, it generates kindness and one-clidates society." The opinions of such men as Luther, Calvin, ambert, Duncan, Peter Martyr, Balanford and others are very interesting, but too lengthy for sublication here.

Among more modern opinious of weight amplist be given that of Richard A. Proctor, who says. "I cannot see the sense of playing for insignificant stakes, it is ently when the takes are large enough to be more than the player can afford that any excitement can be added to the pleasure which a good game like whist affords in itself."

In regard to the origin of camis, the fact is as unsettled to-day as ever.

Breitkopf asserts and proves cards to be of Eastern origin and very shedent.

Herisken proves them to be of German invention.

Sense writers claim they are of Hindostanic rigin. But passing by round cards, woofen ards, sword's cups, leaves, accens, animals, ackse containing from forty to 120, and other amorous changes they have undergone, the stressis pack of lifty-two cards was introduced in England about 1879, and, althought, a great leal of momey has been expended in trying as serfect it. to improve the drawing of the curri-ards, all has failed, and people want the card so-day that our accestors played with 100 cars ago.

In the aixceenth year of Charles II an Act was passed, which, translated accerting to Charto, reads:

"An act to begaine gaming, to prevent wealthy pigeons being placked by artful rooks, and to discourage betting or playing for large sums to tick."

Pusthiasine Justus tells this story of Populace X: His believes once, while playing at a game similar to primero, held such cards as made it impossible for him to least, except from the circumstance of his being the fast player, but as his adversary, whose true it was tell clare first, proposed a heavy stake, he concluded that he held as good cards as brangelf. Being reluctant to yield the game, be cried, "Give me a point and I will see you. The other, not asspecting that the Pope fast sind valpital pards, readily assented and consequently lost.

"I am delighted to learn that Mousices de Sales is a saint. He was fould of saying smuthy things and need to clean at cards. In other respects he was a perfect gentleman although he was a imag." It is also said of Talleyrand that in a land at weather he intentionally exposed one disc, after putting up his last loss of or on his faind. The rase was successful, for the appendix would not call, and he was with a workless hand.
